"There is a scarcity of kerosene also and electricity is, of course, not available to the isolated farmhouse," says Mr. Anderson, who quotes from the Tidsskrift for Industri, which, in discussing the possibilities of acetylene and alcohol illumination, states: "Acetylene may now legally be used and may be included in fire insurance risks. As a result the manufacture of acetylene lamps has flourished greatly and at the end of the year 180 types had been put on the market."

As the head of the Salvation Army of the United States, Evangeline Booth is finding many duties in connection with the United War Work Drive, which is to be staged November 11-18, the Salvation Army being one of the seven organizations in the drive.

The workers of the Salvation Army are active at home and abroad and, under the general direction of Miss Booth, they are mending clothes, urging soldiers to write home, providing innocent games, music and other wholesome forms of amusement in the huts, and are doing their work with a true Christian spirit.

Serving the allies on the western front the Salvation Army is maintaining 410 huts, hostels and rest rooms. The Salvation Army entered upon its work as an international organization within 14 days after Germany invaded Belgium.

CHANGES OPINION OF MARINE AS FIGHTER

Captured German Officer's Diary Reveals Sudden Amendment in Valuation.

Secretary Daniels authorizes the following:

How the contemptuous opinion of the Germans for the fighting ability of American troops may be changed literally overnight is shown in an extract from the diary of a German officer who was captured and taken into the American lines by the marines. A translation of the diary has just been received at marine corps headquarters.

Reserve Lieutenant Tillmanns, the writer of the diary, belonged to the Second battalion of the Fortieth regiment (Baden Guards), Twenty-eighth division. This was the fourth division which the marines had against them in the fighting around Chateau-Thierry. The other three were so badly cut up that they could not carry out their orders to attack.

The extract from Lieutenant Tillmanns' diary follows:

"June 6th: Departure from Rocourt 8 p. m. to Bruyeres further back Coigny. We had to move out of Rocourt because it did not belong to our sector. Rear is crammed full of troops. Billets, therefore, very scarce.

June 7th: At the front. American troops have made counter-attacks. We have to move to the front again. Route of march over Rocourt Epoux. We are lying in the woods to the right of Etrepilly for the present, in position. In the night of 8th and 9th we will relieve the front line. It must be a sad outfit which allows itself to be thrown out by the Americans.

"June 8th and 9th: Moved forward at night and relieved the Four Hundred and Sixty-first regiment at four in the morning in the Bois de Belleau. Incomprehensibly wide sector. Where there were three companies, we have only one.

"June 9th and 10th: The worst night of my life. I am lying in the thick woods on an open height in little holes behind rocks, for this is heavy artillery fire, until six o'clock in the morning. It is a wonder that the fellows were all at their posts when the Americans attacked. The attack, thank God, was repulsed. God has again mercifully preserved me."

The diary ends abruptly, as the next day the writer was a prisoner in the hands of the Americans.

HOW ESKIMO SOLDIER DIED

Bravely Fighting in France for Liberty; His People Should Be Proud of Him.

Here is the story of how Great Britain's only Eskimo soldier fell in France. John Shiwak was the hero's name and when the great war started he heard the call in far-off Labrador and before many months had gone by he was in an English training camp. Some weeks later he was on his way to France, full of ardor. His death occurred in the Cambrai tank drive. The tanks were held up by the canal before Masnières and John's company was ordered to rush a narrow bridge that had unaccountably been left standing. John, chief sniper for the battalion, lately promoted to lance corporal, the muscular man of the wilds, outpaced his comrades. The battalion still argue which was the first to reach the bridge, John or another. But John reached the height of the little arch and turned to wave his companions on.

It was a deadly corner of the battle front. The Germans, granted a breathing space by the obstacle of the canal, were rallying. Big shells were dropping everywhere, scores of machine guns were barking across the narrow line of protecting water. And just beyond the bridgehead, in among the trees, the enemy had erected platforms in tiers, bearing machine guns. As John stood, his helmet awry, his mouth open in shouts of encouragement unheard amid the din, the deadly group of guns broke loose. That was why the bridge had been left.

The Eskimo swayed, bent a little, then slowly sank. But even as he lay they saw his hand point ahead. And then he lay still. And they passed him on the bridge, lying straight and peaceful, gone to a better hunting ground than he had ever anticipated.

LANDMARK IN CITY OF PENN

Many Philadelphia Citizens Would Deeply Regret the Passing of Famous Old Alehouse.

Some Philadelphians of sentimental and convivial turn are disposed to regard the possible advent of prohibition with gloomy mien, if for no other reason than because it would mean the passing of the Old Ale House, on Drury street near Thirteenth.

It is not age that gives flavor to the Old Ale House. The legend on the rusty signboard which states that it was established by Mary McGillan in 1870 does not count for much in a city where many taverns can trace a direct lineage from the days of Penn. It is rather the garment of tradition with which the old taproom has covered itself.

It was there that this and that heavyweight signed articles for an immortal bout. It was there that politicians hatched a celebrated deal about which newspaper editorials are still being written and public speeches still being made. It was there that many a young genius found the inspiration which changed him from a bohemian hack to a successful author. Over it all "Mother" McGillan presided with a discipline at once gentle and stern. The brawls were rare.

The Old Ale House is no less a landmark than a sight. The visitor is usually taken there in the early afternoon, and while he sips the ale from his mug the attentive guide recounts the history, adding a line or two from personal reminiscences. The Ale House seems to fit all moods and to attract a variety of minds. It is furnished in mission wood after the fashion of the English inns of the eighteenth century, but that is as far as an attempt at atmosphere has been made.

Wartime Nerves.

As the war progresses to its finish, which will come some glad day, perhaps even nearer than is now expected, the strain upon those who await its outcome with the most intense anxiety daily becomes more difficult to stand. The tense situation encourages the development of a state of mind which is harassing, and one, which, if not checked, must ultimately result in a more or less serious collapse after such long-continued pressure. Great restraint of natural impulses toward over-excitement concerning the war is essential as well to the individual as to the national well-being. Americans must keep their heads cool and their bodies strong in order to do their full duty in this great emergency. They must not give way to feelings of despondency when temporary discouragements to the advance of the cause occur, nor should they become too sanguine of immediate success when the news comes of a decided advantage. The untroubled and serene mind is to be sedulously cultivated in these stirring times.—The Bellman.

Fire caught in the ceiling up stairs from the stove-pipe and was rapidly eating its way toward the roof. It was seen by Senator Hoopes and the alarm was given at once. By hard work the fire was extinguished but had it been a few minutes longer before being discovered the building would have been destroyed. As it was several lights were broken out and the Hembree furniture considerably damaged. The building belongs to G. M. Martin.

J. T. Ashburn, of Ozone, was in town Saturday on his return from Fentress county where he had been visiting with friends for a few days.

He and partner had a few hundred head of sheep on the range the past year and they cleared a few acres and were preparing to build a residence, but gave it up and decided to return to the Buckeye state.

CLOSING HOUR CHANGED

At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the First National Bank of Crossville held in their banking room on the 15th of November, 1918, Section 13 of the By Laws was changed to read, "The bank shall open its doors for business at eight o'clock a. m. and close at three o'clock p. m., instead of opening at eight o'clock a. m. and closing at four o'clock p. m." There will be no interruption at the noon hour.

This was done in order to give the bank force time to work up the day's business of that day that they might not have extra work to do the next morning before starting on a new day's business. Quite frequently they have extra work to do which cannot now be done after closing hours. Heretofore it was very inconvenient to do it and try to wait on the general public at the same time. It is desired that patrons of the bank make their deposits as early in the day as practicable and it is hoped that this change will not inconvenience any one.
